WAR

Jesus said there would be “wars and rumors of wars . . . but the end is not yet” (Matthew 24:6). Since that time, many thousands have died attempting to conquer and defend the soil considered sacred to three major world religions—Christianity, Islam, and Judaism.

On May 14, 1948, the British flag was lowered in Tel Aviv for the last time. At 4:00 that afternoon, Israel was declared to be a nation again, amidst the singing of the Jewish National Anthem, the Hatikvah. While it was the beginning of the nation, it was also the beginning of a number of wars fought to maintain not only their nationhood but their very territory and lives.

THE WAR OF INDEPENDENCE

The day following their declared independence, Israel was invaded by Egypt, Jordan, Iraq, Syria, and Lebanon. Nearly 45 million Arabs went to war with 64,000 Jews. Britain's Field Marshall Montgomery predicted that it would take the Arabs but eight days to drive the Jews into the sea. Nine months and four days later, Israel had not only survived, but had come out much strengthened, with 23 percent more territory than they had been allotted in the 1947 partition plan.

The Arabs, outnumbering the Jews almost forty to one, had a very simple battle plan. Egypt was to attack from the south with 10,000 men, sweep up the Negev toward Tel Aviv with half the force, and the rest would move toward Jerusalem. Lebanese, Syrian, and Iraqi forces would move down from the north, through Galilee, into Haifa, and on toward Tel Aviv, where they would join up with Egyptian forces. From the East, Jordan would send 10,000 men to occupy the West Bank, capture the Old City of Jerusalem, and lay siege to the new city.

The outcome of the war was probably determined more by the overrun the gun placements. By the next day, Israeli forces were twelve miles into Syria, capturing villages as far north as Kuneitra. A cease-fire was arranged for 4:30 on the afternoon of June 10.

Egyptian losses in both men and equipment were very heavy, although casualty figures were never released by the Egyptian government. Jordanian casualties were listed as 6,094 killed and missing, 762 wounded, and 463 taken prisoner. Israeli losses were given at 679 killed and 2,563 wounded.

THE YOM KIPPUR WAR

Tensions between Israel and the surrounding nations have never been completely tranquil, but in the fall of 1973 the situation became worse. Finally, on a day when they thought Israelis would be least prepared to defend themselves, Egypt from the south and Syria from the north attacked. The assault was planned for 6:00 P.M. on October 6, which was Yom Kippur, a day when Israelis would have been observing a fast—their most holy day of worship. Russian satellite intelligence warned the Syrians that Israel was beginning to expect something and was making preparations, so the attack actually took place four hours earlier than scheduled.

The amassing of troops and armor was said to be the largest since the close of World War II, some 5,000 tanks and more than one million men—838,000 Arabs and 275,000 Jews. Egypt alone was said to have thrown 3,000 tanks, 2,000 heavy guns, and 600,000 men against the Israelis.

Considering just the strength of forces alone, it should have been the annihilation of the State of Israel that followed in the next nineteen days. Being caught so terribly off guard and outnumbered, Golda Meir later confessed, "For the first time in our twenty-five year history, we thought we might have lost."

At one time only a few dozen tanks stood in the way, both in the north and the south, of oncoming Arab forces. But during an unexplained two-day lull in the fighting Israel was able to regroup and, on October 19, a tank battle of unprecedented magnitude took place in the Sinai. When the dust cleared, Israel had won a tremendous victory and began pressing on into Egypt, conquering territory west of the Suez. In the north, Israel began pushing the Syrians back, and by the time a cease-fire was arranged Israeli troops were in Damascus.

During this war Arab casualties were more than 4,000.

WAR IN LEBANON

Over the years, Israel's border areas have been the target of many attacks. In the early 1980s there had been many attacks on the section of northern Galilee. These attacks came primarily from Palestinian guerrillas in the southern part of Lebanon. In 1980, more than 400 rockets and shells had fallen on Galilee. These had resulted in only two deaths, but the time had come to clear southern Lebanon. In 1980, the Israeli Defense Force launched "Operation Peace for Galilee," with the objective of removing all the areas twenty-five miles north of Israel.

This initial objective was reached with little difficulty. It became quickly evident that, once started, the fighting there. In the areas captured by the Israeli forces, many were found, some small and some large. There were schools, near a mosque, a school, a hospital, or a church. The Israelis, from hitting them with air or rocket attacks, were not to be injured. The amount of arms captured was many times what even the efficient Israeli intelligence had estimated. Just in the southern area of Lebanon, it took trucks about five weeks to evacuate the material. For unknown reasons, the amount of arms captured was many times more than the PLO could have needed.

The invasion continued on toward Beirut. The PLO and themselves engaged in a war of a much longer duration than the politicians had promised. The PLO had been in Lebanon and there the Israeli Defense Forces concentrated on conducting air strikes on PLO headquarters and on Beirut. In September 1982, all PLO troops were evacuated from the country, but others simply made their headquarters in the country.

WAR IN LEBANON

Over the years, Israel's border areas have always been vulnerable to attack. In the early 1980s there had been numerous rocket and mortar attacks on the section of northern Galilee that bordered on Lebanon.
These attacks came primarily from Palestinians who had set up operation in the southern part of Lebanon. In the year prior to June 1982, more than 400 rockets and shells had fallen inside Israel. Even though these had resulted in only two deaths, the Israeli government decided the time had come to clear southern Lebanon of this threat. On June 6, 1982, the Israeli Defense Force launched what they called "Operation Peace for Galilee," with the objective of removing PLO presence from all the areas twenty-five miles north of Israel's border.

This initial objective was reached within a matter of days, but it became quickly evident that, once started, the operation would not stop there. In the areas captured by the Israeli forces dozens of armed caches were found, some small and some large. The arms were usually situated near a mosque, a school, a hospital, or a church so as to deter the Israelis from hitting them with air or rocket attacks for fear that civilians would be injured. The amount of arms captured was staggering, some ten times what even the efficient Israeli intelligence had estimated was in the area. Just in the southern area of Lebanon it took 1,000 men and 150 trucks about five weeks to evacuate the many tons of arms captured.
For unknown reasons, the amount of arms captured was overwhelmingly more than the PLO could have needed for its own troops.

The invasion continued on toward Beirut, where the Israelis found themselves engaged in a war of a much longer term than the few weeks the politicians had promised. The PLO had its headquarters in Beirut, and there the Israeli Defense Forces concentrated their attention, including air strikes on PLO headquarters and weapons dumps. Finally, in September 1982, all PLO troops were evacuated from Beirut. Many left the country, but others simply made their way to the north of the country.

Still, Israel was not able to extricate itself from the quagmire of Lebanon. As casualty figures mounted, public support for the operation dwindled. In a poll taken in June 1982, 84 percent felt it was the right action to take, but by the time Israeli troops withdrew in June 1985, 40 percent felt that it had been the wrong step to take, and 75 percent felt the operation had been a failure. Never before in the history of Israel's wars had there been such a wave of antiwar protest. Even numbers of soldiers chose to go to prison rather than participate in the war.

In mid-June 1985 Israel completely withdrew from Lebanon. Even then, there was a declared buffer zone that would continue to be patrolled by Israeli troops to prevent the return of PLO troops. By the time of the withdrawal, more than 650 Israeli soldiers had died. On the day of the final pullback, two shells fell on northern Galilee, and such attacks continued periodically in the months that followed.

Israel takes advantage of 95 percent of its renewable water, perhaps the most abundant in the world. It uses 50 billion cubic feet of water each year, 15 percent for urban and domestic use. The area has grown from 75,000 acres in 1948 to 425,000 acres today.

One study conducted by Thomas M. Bruneau of Pennsylvania's Middle East Research Institute found that the increasingly tense days ahead for the region are a problem of water resources. At present, both countries could run out of water within a few years. With Israel's current use of 95 percent of its water, the Institute's study concluded that it would need an additional 800 million cubic meters of water, or 267 billion gallons.

Jordan will have a deficit at the end of the century. The water shortage is likely to exacerbate the problems of these two nations. The result could lead to increased hostilities, either directly or indirectly. On the other hand, it could force the countries to overcome their differences and begin to cooperate.

The study concentrated on the Jordan River, the natural boundary between the two countries. It suggested that with the crisis by restructuring its economy and agriculture, which uses most of the water, the move would be difficult, not only because of the economic problems but because of the political and religious problems being so deeply rooted in Zionism.

Water has been a problem in Israel since its founding. The men fought the local inhabitants of the West Bank. The Old Testament shows Israel has
